Dear Naomi,

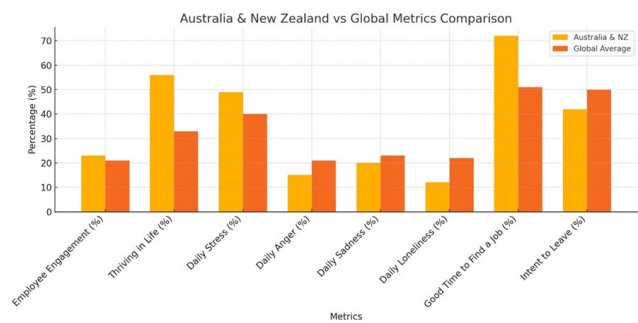

Welcome to the June edition of our newsletter. We hope you enjoy the article on workplace wellbeing, hearing about our recent audit training in QLD and Masterclasses we are delivering at NATA's upcoming conference.

How do Australia & New Zealand Compare Globally in Workplace Wellbeing?

According to the Gallup State of the Global Workplace 2025 report, Australia and New Zealand lead the world in life satisfaction and access to work opportunities. While these are impressive, we also rank as the second-highest globally for experiencing daily stress.

This high stress rate is a red flag, especially considering our historically strong well-being scores. Although we remain the top global performer in life satisfaction ("thriving"), the report notes a four percentage-point decline from previous highs. Housing affordability issues, inflationary pressures and economic uncertainty are cited as the key contributing factors.

DID YOU KNOW?

Globally, only 21% of employees are engaged at work, and this has declined by 2 percentage points over the past year - matching the drop seen during the height of the COVID-19 pandemic. The main reason? Manager burnout: Engagement among managers fell from 30% to 27%, showing how the wellbeing of leaders directly impacts the entire workplace.
